1. Executive Summary

This report presents a structured research and data analysis exercise covering 10 leading Non-Governmental Organizations (NGOs) operating in India, undertaken as part of a Data Analytics Internship assignment. The study draws exclusively on official NGO websites, Wikipedia, and other verifiable public sources to compile a research database, followed by quantitative and qualitative analysis of the organizations' founding history, geographic footprint, thematic focus areas, governance structures, and public impact. The organizations studied are Smile Foundation, CRY (Child Rights and You), Pratham Education Foundation, Goonj, HelpAge India, CARE India, Akshaya Patra Foundation, WWF India, GiveIndia, and SEWA (Self Employed Women's Association). Collectively, these NGOs were founded between 1946 and 2002, are headquartered predominantly in Delhi-NCR, Mumbai, Bengaluru and Ahmedabad, and reach tens of millions of beneficiaries every year across education, health, nutrition, elderly welfare, women's empowerment, environmental conservation, and disaster relief.

2. Objective

The objective of this assignment was to research 10 well-known NGOs operating in India using only their official websites and trusted public sources, and to compile the findings into a professional, accurate and visually structured Excel workbook, PDF report, and accompanying communication material, reflecting the standards expected of a professional Data Analyst.

3. Methodology

- Identified 10 well-known, reputed NGOs operating across India covering diverse thematic areas.
- Researched each NGO exclusively via its official website, supplemented by Wikipedia and other trusted secondary sources (news archives, CSR databases, LinkedIn) strictly for cross-verification.
- Captured 29 standardized data fields per NGO (founding details, leadership, mission/vision, programs, reach, contact and social media presence, and source citation).
- Marked any field not confirmable from public sources as 'Not Publicly Available' rather than estimating or fabricating information.
- Consolidated the dataset into a structured Excel workbook, ran formula-based quantitative analysis (organization-type distribution, state-wise distribution, founding-decade analysis, focus-area frequency), and visualized results using PIE, BAR, COLUMN, DOUGHNUT and TIMELINE charts on an executive dashboard.
- Synthesized insights and recommendations based on patterns observed across the dataset.

4. NGO Overview

7. Insights

- Education is the single most represented focus area across the dataset, reflecting the sector's national priority on foundational learning and child development.
- Delhi/NCR is the most common headquarters location, reinforcing its status as India's non-profit administrative hub, largely due to proximity to government, embassies and CSR-heavy corporate offices.
- Half of the surveyed NGOs were founded in the 1970s-1990s, indicating a wave of institution-building in India's early civil-society movement, distinct from the more recent 2000s wave (GiveIndia, Akshaya Patra, Smile Foundation).
- Women's empowerment is a cross-cutting theme, appearing explicitly in the mandates of CARE India, SEWA, and Smile Foundation, beyond dedicated single-issue NGOs.
- Several NGOs (CRY, Pratham, Goonj, HelpAge India, SEWA) were founded by individual social entrepreneurs who remain closely associated with the organization's identity, while others (CARE India, WWF India) are Indian chapters of global federations.
- Contact-level data (official email/phone) is largely unavailable in the public domain, consistent with most Indian NGOs directing donor and public queries through website contact forms rather than publishing direct emails.

8. Recommendations

- Prioritise CSR partnerships with NGOs whose focus areas (education, health, livelihood) align most closely with corporate ESG themes, for higher grant-utilisation efficiency.
- Encourage NGOs lacking published SDG mappings to formally publish SDG alignment, improving transparency for institutional and international donors.
- Support smaller or newer NGOs (2000s cohort) in building the multi-decade brand trust that older organizations (CRY, HelpAge India, SEWA) have achieved.
- Recommend that NGOs publish standardised public contact details (official email/phone) to improve donor and researcher accessibility.
- Explore cross-sector collaboration opportunities (e.g., Akshaya Patra and Pratham on the child nutrition-education linkage) given overlapping child-focused beneficiary bases.

9. Conclusion

This research and analysis exercise demonstrates that India's non-profit sector — as represented by these 10 leading NGOs — is mature, diversified and increasingly professionalised, with strong founder-led legacies, formal governance structures (Boards of Trustees, CEOs), and verifiable public reporting. From Pratham's pioneering work in foundational education assessment (ASER) to Akshaya Patra's position as the world's largest NGO-run school feeding programme, and from SEWA's status as India's largest trade union of informal-sector women workers to WWF India's five-decade conservation legacy, each organization illustrates a distinct and impactful model of social change. This assignment reinforced practical skills in structured research, data cleaning, quantitative analysis, dashboard design and professional business reporting — all core competencies for a Data Analyst working in the social impact and CSR domain.
